

Senior heritage consultant

Context is looking for an experienced heritage consultant to be part of our team working on a range of interesting heritage projects, including:

- local heritage studies
- municipal heritage plans and strategies
- conservation management plans
- community-based heritage processes: consultation, workshops etc
- social significance assessment
- Indigenous heritage management: places, policies, research.

You would be part of a small, specialist team, working for existing and new clients. Communication skills are important as you would have direct client contact, and be managing project teams comprising internal and external consultants. You would need skills in time management, delegation, creative and strategic thinking, and working collaboratively.

The right person will have broad experience and well-honed skills in heritage assessment, planning and management. Your specialisation could be in one of many relevant disciplines, including: planning and policy, cultural landscapes, architecture, history, archaeology, urban or rural geography, or other allied field.

Previous work as a consultant, including project management, would be a distinct advantage. Suitable applicants will have 5-8+ years experience.

As well as heritage, Context works in the fields of community and environment, and others on our team offer skills in facilitation, community information, consultation, environmental policy and planning, education and training and change management and more!

The position is full-time, and based in Brunswick (Victoria). Some travel locally and interstate is involved.

While we are looking for someone to join our in-house team, we are also always interested in talking with other consultants about possible collaborations. And we expect to have a 12 month senior consultant position available starting in June as well – possibly a secondment or a contract position.
